Fired. Smeared. Now Free. Why We Won't Publish This Episode Here Transcript

(Transcripts are generated by AI and may contain errors)

Why the Episode Was Moved Off YouTube

Hey everyone, James here. You know, if we post a video here and it gets taken down or flagged, it actually affects the other videos. It affects all the videos that we try to share with you because they repress them and make sure that you don't see them.

So we have to make the decision sometimes when we an episode that think might get pulled to just simply not publish it here on YouTube. And that's what we've done with this episode.

It's a fascinating episode. If you saw our previous episode with Dr.

Dr. Sam Bailey Conversation and Where to Watch

Mark Bailey and Autumn McLeese, this is Mark's wife, Dr Sam Bailey, and she doesn't necessarily go into the same topic as Mark did, but she does touch on them and we just don't want to risk this episode getting taken down because it's such a great episode It's really an episode about, you know, when you're following conventional medicine, and when your life is kind of centered around certain beliefs and those get demolished, where does your live go from there?

At least this is where Dr. Sam Bailey's life went. I can't wait for you to hear this episode, but you are not going to watch it on YouTube. We now have a Rumble account where we are going post these episodes since Rumbles is more conducive towards different views.

Definitely check out this full conversation of Dr. Sam Bailey there. It's available right now. You can go and check them out at the links down below.

Closing Thoughts on Curiosity and Open Dialogue

Thank you for everyone who's listened to previous episodes. Thanks for supporting the show and thank you just for spreading the word. We really do feel that these topics, whether you agree with them or not, are important to have conversations around.

There is no one narrative, right? We are all about curiosity, we're about asking the questions, and mostly we are about sharing conversations that could be valuable, that can open up to a new perspective.

So thank you again, stay curious, live well, keep it ancestral. I'll see you in the next episode.