Hidden Cookware Trigger for Thyroid Health

You are here because you care about healing your thyroid. But what if the most overlooked trigger of your thyroid autoimmunity isn't the food, isn't the stress, or the supplements, but it's what you cook your meals on in 2024?

Researchers at Flinders University discovered that just one scratch on your Teflon nonstick pan can release up to 9000 microplastics in your food.

How Nonstick Pans Release Microplastics

And those particles don't just pass through your body. They have shown to disrupt your hormones, cause chronic inflammation in your body, overburden your liver with too much toxins, as well as create an imbalance in your immune system.

And all of these underlying mechanisms are exactly the issues that Hashimoto's people are dealing with. Which means that even if you have cleaned up your diet, you gave up that gluten, you gave up processed food.

Why Toxic Cookware Matters for Hashimoto's

But the toxic cookware that you might be using, meal after meal, might be the underlying reason which is sabotaging your thyroid health. So this is where safer cookware matters so much specifically for people who have thyroid and Hashimoto's disease.

This is where I'm sharing with you the chef's foundry. P600 ceramic cookware with you. The P600 cookware are 100% free from Teflon coating. PFAs and also plastic coatings.
